Mission Control has a new home screen!

So far, Alien Worlds mostly has been a very lonely game. Many play paths of Alien Worlds require you to play all on your own. Optimize for yourself, with very little visibility on how many different players there are.

We think this isn't giving players the right impression of what is happening around them. So a central element of this update was to give more visibility to what actually is going on around Mission Control.

The new Mission Control Dashboard

Each player will be represented by his current level in Mission Control and his current avatar he is using in Alien Worlds. Only important events are displayed, like started adventures with a score of over 350.

Mission Control also got some additional features with this update:

First, we published some tutorials for different aspects of Mission Control, providing some more insight and details than before. You can find them in the “public” section of the menu. Also there now is a prominent display which shows the last three prize pool sponsors for Mission Control. Make sure to drop a like for one of them up to once per hour to show your appreciation. We also introduced your personal Daily MC Claim: once per day, you can claim 100 MC points. You can find this in the user settings. For more information on this, we refer to the respective tutorial.

You can now also earn MC points by recruiting friends to Mission Control. After their membership becomes verified, for three month, you get 15% of all MC points they spend.
